

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE FUNDS

Objectives, Policies, and Procedures

Revised January 19, 2017

INTRODUCTION

The City Council of the City of Rancho Mirage has determined that a special assistance fund shall be set aside each fiscal year for the purposes of allocation to community groups and organizations that provide special activities, programs or services to the citizens of the community.

The number and variety of funding requests made to the City have increased over the years. In order to provide guidance to those groups and organizations that may wish to request funds, City staff in coordination with the SAF Subcommittee has prepared this report, including policies for the allocation of funds.

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE NEEDS

The number of requests for funding assistance by community groups and organizations has increased over the past few years. This trend can be expected to continue for several reasons:

- Decrease in or elimination of other revenue sources for human services, especially at the Federal, State and local levels.
- Significant additions to municipal responsibilities that have expanded traditional governmental functions into new areas, such as economic development, affordable housing, and environmental concerns.
- Heightened sensitivity by local government regarding community needs and a high quality living environment, brought about by increased needs and expectations on the part of the citizens.

The combined effect of decreases in resources, expansion into non-traditional areas of government and demands by a more sophisticated cosmopolitan constituency add up to a lively competition for funds and difficult choices for the City Council and the community to face. Refer to Table 1 for areas of concern identified by City Staff that could be potentially addressed through special assistance funding.

SPECIAL ASSISTANCE FUNDS: PAST, PRESENT AND FUTURE

The City of Rancho Mirage has long recognized that services and programs provided by various groups and organizations represent a valued community asset, one that makes Rancho Mirage “livable” in the best sense of the word. A variety of programs and services have had the long-term support of local elected officials and the City Administration.

The City of Rancho Mirage has formalized the process that provides support to community groups and organizations. With these guidelines, a more directed emphasis can be achieved, as all funding requests will be consistently evaluated once a year.

City Staff, City Council and the Community, must continually explore the following questions:

- What areas fall below the desired level of livability? Which are basic? Which should be publicly supported to provide a quality of life for Rancho Mirage residents? Which needs are high priorities? Which can be deferred?
- Which services or programs can correct areas of deficiency? How? What is the relative importance of different services or programs?
- Should limited resources, including funds, be targeted to achieve a maximum benefit or be dispersed among many groups and organizations? How should limited resources be divided between people, such as persons with AIDS or dysfunctional children, and places, like a neighborhood with substandard housing conditions or a fire station? How should public dollars be divided among organizations with a more moderate need where a positive long-term impact can be made and organizations where the need is so great that funds may disappear without signs of positive change?
- How can local government "giving" be reconciled with the goals of private sector support and independence of groups and organizations that need to continue programs and services even without public dollars? How can the responsibility to administer an efficient, effective, non-duplicative program and spend public funds wisely be reconciled with the obligation to be responsive to the needs of Rancho Mirage residents?

Whatever the outcome, these questions must be answered in the context of continual change. With the diversity of Rancho Mirage residents, there will be new problems as well as opportunities to achieve a truly livable community.

ALLOCATING SPECIAL ASSISTANCE FUNDS: ALTERNATIVES

Funds that are allocated to community groups and organizations have a symbolic value that generally exceeds the amount of funds available; giving dollars is translated into an indicator of what is important to the community. The task of distributing these funds becomes difficult in a competitive setting where groups and organizations lobby for dollars.

To defuse this situation and give direction to the process, many communities have developed allocations methods based on the approaches explained very briefly below.

- Orientation toward place. Many communities, as well as State and Federal funding programs, opt for an approach that focuses funding on geography, such as a particular neighborhood or a community facility.
- Orientation toward people. This approach represents a focus on special groups of people, such as low-income, elderly, the homeless or unemployed.
- Orientation toward concentration of resources. Communities will frequently focus the maximum available resources on either a place or a special population. For example, a city may commit all special assistance funds to housing rehabilitation activities in one neighborhood, even though other neighborhoods could also benefit from a similar program.
- Orientation toward dispersal of resources. This approach typically legitimizes past historic action on the part of a community. The total funding “pie” will be sliced so that every qualified group or organization seeking assistance can get “a piece of the pie.” Sometimes, when dollars are limited, community groups and organizations are encouraged to work out among themselves who will request assistance and develop “gentlemen’s agreements” related to timing of future requests.

Another form of dispersal is the allocation of public dollars over a number of years, set aside each year for an earmarked organization or project. This is frequently done to accumulate a larger amount of revenue to undertake a more expensive capital project.

These are just a few options that are utilized by communities to allocate special assistance funds. Frequently, a community will use a combination of several approaches.

THE ALLOCATION OF PROCESS AND DECISION

Faced with a wide range of community needs, limited financial resources and a growing number of requests by worthwhile organizations, the City of Rancho Mirage has established special assistance funding allocation policies and procedures that represent a significant choice of direction. Expenditure decisions will then reflect a commitment of limited resources to attain community objectives.

The keystone of this effort is improving the livability of our community for the residents. The City's strategies, as expressed in the policies that follow, are designed to encompass an orientation toward both people and places, in response to community needs and objectives.
